Gooderham & Worts

"Materially robust and spatially intriguing this complex of historical industrial buildings is a small 'city within a city'. Gooderham and Worts reconnects us, through time with Victorian Toronto, with the production of millions of gallons of spirits, with a town becoming a city. Its substantial masonry masses confront the thinness and transitory nature of modernity. In its empty state, awaiting rehabilitation and reuse, Gooderham and Worts is haunting -- a place charged with memory and the angst of history. It should be preserved and once again become part of the life of Toronto." -- Katherine Govier, Toronto Places - A Context For Urban Design, The City of Toronto and University Press, 1992
