

COL. CHADWICK PASSES, AGED 72

Semi-Military Honors During Funeral Today

- OVERSEAS 1915-1917.

Semi-military honors will be accorded today to Col. William Craven Vaux Chadwick, 72, prominent in military circles, and for forty years an architect in Toronto. Funeral services will be held this afternoon in the Chapel of St. James the Less, with interment in St. James Cemetery. He died at his home, 54 South Drive. For many years he was officer commanding the Mississauga Horse.

Born in Toronto, Colonel Chadwick received his education at Jarvis Collegiate and Upper Canada College. He was articled in architecture to the late R. C. Windeyer. He first entered into partnership with C. Cassels and later with the late Colonel S. G. Beckett. Following seventeen years' service with the militia, mostly with the 36th Peel Regiment, Colonel Chadwick was selected by General Sir William Otter to take over command of the Toronto Light Horse. Squadrons of the regiment were located in Toronto, Barrie, and Oakville, and Colonel Chadwick was instrumental in having the name changed to Mississauga Horse. He retired to the reserve of officers in 1913.

At the outbreak of the first Great War in 1914 he raised the 4th C.M.R. for service overseas, and was transferred to the 7th Overseas Brigade at Valcartier, which was later disbanded. In 1915 he raised the 124th Battalion, C.E.F., and commanded this battalion in France until 1917. He was then transferred to Canadian Corps Headquarters where he continued service until the end of the war. In 1933 he was gazetted an honorary colonel in his old regiment.

Following the war he engaged in practice as an architect with his brother, Bryan Chadwick, and responsible for designing a number of commercial and industrial buildings downtown. Recently he was elected an honorary member of the Ontario Association of Architects.

He was a member of St. Simon's Anglican Church and the Toronto Club and a former member of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club and the Toronto Hunt Club. Surviving are three brothers, Bryan of Toronto; George and Richard of Montreal, and one sister, Miss Louisa Chadwick of Toronto.
